When the board of Southern Regional Wastewater Management District meets with URS representatives on November 27, it will hopefully find the answers to several questions raised in response to the most recent study done by the engineering firm. Plant capacity seems to be at the center of the disagreements.

The study was presented in August 2002. In January 2001, the firm completed a first study which made recommendations on a county wide plan for collection and treatment of wastewater - which was contradicted by the 2002 report.

At a recent board meeting, district engineer Duke Levy was asked to draft a letter to URS stating several questions he

Bay to reconsider zoning code variance provisions

BY MARY G. SEILEY

Staff Writer Plans for a $2.75-million redevelopment of a deteriorated section of Bay St. won approval Tuesday night.

The Bay St. Louis City Council also agreed to consider significant revisions to the zoning code's variance provisions.

The Beaux Arts redevelopment project will include restoration of an art deco building at Ulman and Dunbar streets, and construction of a three-story, 12-unit condominium building on adjoining property.

New Orleans developer Barry Trinchard has purchased the blighted area bounded by Ulman, Dunbar and Webster streets for the two-part redevelopment project. He also has an option on other Ulman Street property, and says he'd like to build two more similar condominiums on that tract in the future.

While city officials applauded the downtown improvement plans, there was some confusion to overcome with the legality of its details. It appeared that zoning on part of the tract might not accommodate Trinchard's proposal without significant variances from the zoning code.

By Tuesday, however, officials were assured that the tract's existing commercial zoning status would facilitate the plans. Council agreed to reconfigure the property's subdivision lines, clearing the way for the project.

Council was assured Trinchard would install a fire sprinkler system in the new building, which will rise to more than 40 feet.

Meanwhile, unrelated recent zoning variance requests of council's agenda have sparked a review of the code's variance regulations. In one recent case, council reluctantly rejected a variance for a woman who built a carport — without a building permit. The roof is a mere six inches from the property sideline. A neighbor who objected to the Melody Lane structure pointed out that the code requires nine conditions be met before council can grant any variances including one provision that states the applicant can't have caused the problem in the first place.

Tuesday, an uncontested variance sought by Jim Henrie for a similar project was approved. Henrie, a member of the city Planning and Zoning Commission had asked council to consider his case on its own mer-

Henrie wants to build two carports on the sides of a duplex on Hickory Lane. A key difference in his request and the one which was rejected is that Henrie sought approval before building.

The applicant whose variance was rejected, Rita McWilliams, had said a friend constructed a roof over an existing slab on her property. She said she didn't realize she needed a building permit or variance for the project.

Tuesday, Henrie's application barely passed. Council president Doug Seal said the city is "up against the wall" with having rejected the other variance request. Ward 2 council member Jim Thriffiley expressed concern over displaying "favoritism" in the Henrie case. And at-large council member Bill Taylor said he would have voted for the McWilliams variance except for the advice that it raises. was legally questionable.

Zoning Commission.

Later in the meeting, Mayor Eddie Favre said he has asked the city attorney to make a proposal for reworking the variance section of the code. As it stands, he said, it's "virtually impossible to meet all nine conditions the law outlines. "If you follow that to a "T," there's no way you can grant a variance.'

Taylor agreed with that assessment saying the ordinance needs room for "common sense" applications. Taylor said he voted against Henrie's application, because "his didn't meet all of this anymore than-McWilliams' did."

In other matters, council: • Agreed to renew its contract with United Health Care for municipal health coverage. The new contract has a 17.7 percent rate hike for the city, and will boost employee contributions as well. Favre said extensive study by his staff found nothing better avail-

• Agreed to abandon a 15-foot wide strip of Ulman Street right-of-way, at the request of three property owners. Thriffiley voted against the abandonment, saying the property has a value of some $40,000 and shouldn't be given away. City Attorney John Scafide said, however, that the city doesn't actually "own" such right-of-way property and can't sell it.

 Was told by Favre that he's hopeful the city can grant employee pay raises during this fiscal year. Even with a 5.5-mill tax increase this year, the city didn't have the money for annual

Sheriff's Department to join nationwide seat belt campaign

BY ELLIS C. CUEVAS Publisher Emeritus

The Hancock County Sheriff's Department will participate in a nationwide campaign November 25 through December 1 titled Click It or Ticket, according to Sheriff Steve Garber.

The campaign is a crackdown on drivers who don't buckle up and don't buckle up kids with proper restraints, Ray Billeaud, Department Sheriff's Resource/DUI School Officer Enforcement reports.

Billeaud said, "When violence hits the school yard and children die, we hear a national outcry. It's time that our nation expresses similar outrage about the more than 2,000 children who die in traffic crashes each year.

"Clearly, our nation's roadways are one of the most deadly places we take our children. Traffic crashes, in fact, remain the No. 1 killer of kids."

"Governors (William) Winter and (Bill) Allain by proclamation made an effort to create nominating committees to screen potential judges to fill vacancies on the court," Pittman added, "and it worked pretty well while it lasted."

But because those nominating committees did not have statutory status, that concept has disappeared in later administrations.

Pittman said he favored a judge merit/retention plan similar to the widely known "Missouri" plan. His proposal would require a judge after serving a three-year appointed term to face a

"I would create by law a -up or down--in order to serve an eight-year term.

To illustrate how money has come to play an inordinate role in election for the state's highest courts, Pittman cited his personal experience of spending only $33,000 when he was first elected in 1988 over four opponents.

That price went up to $300,000 when he was reelected in 1996 and found himself being opposed by BIPEC (Business and Industry Education Committee) which he said, contended it "needed a judge better for business."

"I just could not take their oath, or any other special interest's oath," Pittman declared. "The only thing that protects democracy is the impartiality of the judiciary.'

A constitutional amendment, pushed through by the small-farm voters, in 1912 made the lower trial courts elective by popular

Then, in 1916, a second constitutional amendment made judges of the supreme court also elective, tossing the state's highest level of the judicial system into the political maelstrom. Nine decades later it is even deeper immersed in political muck and now swathed in amounts of political cash undreamed-of when the

What worsens our dilemma of big bucks fueling the system of electing high court judges is that the federal courts deny Mississippi the power to limit judicial campaign spending. state's old taboo against cameras in trial courtrooms. Over a year ago, Pittman spearheaded putting five law to require the giant TV cameras in the Supreme Court to provide live broadcasts of oral arguments before the court over the court's website.

Next week, a study committee created by Pittman, headed by Associate Justice James Graves, will make its recommendations on use of cameras in trial courts. The odds favor lifting the ban, so Mississippi can join many other states which have long permitted news photographers to use cameras in the courtroom.

Levy said in his recent letter, addressed to the board and forwarded to URS, that figures estimating capacity to be 4 MGD. were compiled through calculated values rather than actual field tests. Levy said the plant, completed in May, MGD and possibly higher.

A 1990 document from Hunter Services, Inc., which field testing at the plant, states that the plant had a daily flow capacity of 2.5 MGD and a maximum flow capacity of 3.2 MGD. At an August presentaplant performance and the tion, URS representatives said that before the recent $11 million-plus upgrade, ment needs in the county. the plant had a 3 MGD Plant manager Doyle capacity and that the upgrade added 1 MGD of capacity to the plant.

On Wednesday, URS senior project manager Mike Patorno said that original capacity estimates in the January 2001 study were obtained from the district itself, not actual testing by URS. The purpose of obtaining the figures, he said, was to enable URS to make the best possible recommendations on treatment service that actual field testing at for the county, not to obtain an accurate capacity estishowed capacity to be 5 mate. Those figures were merely to be used for a conceptual plan, he said.

Figures given in the reports results of a year of August 2002 study, he said, were the result of figures calculated as a result of URS's own study. The difference in capacity estimates is a result of several factors, Patorno said. Though the the plant was further original activated-sludge portion of the plant was originally rated at 2.5 MGD, it was based on the presence by URS states that of eight rotary biological Southern Regional "is cur- contractors (RCB's), which are no longer on line. Patorno also said that a mechanical arm which operates in tanks also reduced the actual volume of capacity in those tanks, taking capacity in the old plant from 2.5 to 1.5 MGD.

URS was asked to come in when there was a question that the recent upgrade reduced capacity, Patorno said, but that is not the case. The estimates his company presented are conservative, he said, and not intended to stretch limits, but there are always gray areas in the question of treatment capacity. The district is headed in the right direction, he said. \

Additionally, representatives from URS said, a bottleneck at the plants digesters further reduced capacity to about 3.2 MGD; URS recommended that the district spend $800,000 to add digesters which would bring capacity back to 4 MGD. The digesters are the final process in sludge treatment and must have the properly process removal.

Currently, Breaux Services removes wet sludge from the plant for land farming. Breaux's permit requires a Class B sludge, which ideally requires the material to be processed in digesters for about 40 days. Test results from Micro Methods taken in June, July and October show the plant to be in complete compliance for Class B sludge.

trifuge added in the recent upgrade would alleviate any bottleneck at digesters by taking sludge through a dewatering process, to be removed as a dry material that could be taken to a landfill or composted. A landfill does not require sludge to be Class B. Composting processes sludge to a Class A. Also in the recent upgrade, the district purchased composting equipment and prepared a composting site. But board members have questioned the wisdom of having a composting operation on the plant site. One worry is the odor that might be generated by the process.

Louisiana State University has a composting research program and offered to include Southern Regional in the program several months ago. But recent advertisement for bids on sludge removal only resulted in two responses capacity to allow sludge to one for wet and one for dry sludge removal. LSU did not submit a proposal. So unless the district decides to advertise for new bids, composting will not be an option at this time, said district attorney Ronnie Artiques.

Patorno said he stood by original recommendations for one central treatment plant, because, among other reasons, the savings in operating and maintenance costs of running only one plant, and the fact that only one plant would need to be

Roger Ladner, road superintendent, said most of Bay St. Louis beaches have been cleaned and the current mounds of debris piled up from Garfield Ladner Pier to the Washington Street pier will be moved Friday and Saturday. Then, clean-up efforts will continue west of Garfield Ladner Pier.

"Bear with us," said Tim Kellar. Hancock County Chancery Clerk. "The county is doing all it can to clean up the beach and restore it to its original beauty."

Kellar said the back-toback storms were responsible for the delay in clean-up efforts.

bers balked at some of the mental permits. provisions and wording in the 12-page arrangement with the Southern Regional Wastewater Management District.

A key sticking point was a proposal allowing the district's board to spend up to $350,000 for additions and improvements to its facilities without the unanimous vote of the authority's board two of those were deleted and a two-thirds agreement entirely, including dictates includes only three voting new contract ratified. of all participant governments in the authority.

Council sliced that threshold down to $200,000. saying it would give them more control over the authority's expenditures, and more understanding authority plans before they are implemented.

"I think the $350,000 has to be lowered - drastically," said councilman at-large Bill Taylor. "The higher that sum is, the less we know about what's going on."

Taylor said he's often at odds to explain to constituents the workings of the authority. "People say, 'What's going on over there?' and we say, 'Oh, I don't know. We give them $350,000 to do what they want'."

Favre, who had asked to have the debate held behind closed doors, stressed to council that the $350,000 cap is an entirely new provision in the arrangement among governments. Previously, there was no limit on how much the district board could spend without the specific agreement of the members of the district. Favre noted that the district had moved ahead with an $11.5 million expansion without the specific agreement of all members, and he insisted that the $350,000 cap was a major step to give members more say in district affairs. Favre said the time could come when a proposed expenditure would be difficult to pass muster with a vote of four out of six governments. Still, Taylor and council president Doug Seal insisted that a new limit — less than $350,000 — is appropriate. Council agreed with Favre that the cap should be waived in the event of emergencies that demand immediate action, or to keep the authority in compliance

Taylor had raised 10 points of concern over provisions in the contract earlier this month, after scouring its details. At Tuesday's meeting, Favre said the document was drafted by six attorneys and, consequently, contained some difficultto-decipher provisions.

At Taylor's suggestion, concerning how the city keep its own books pertaining to the payments it has to make to the authority. The city also cut a sentence that could have kept unspecified provisions in the prior contract in effect if not covered in the new contract.

Council also had balked at one paragraph which stated the city would be "unconditionally obligated" to pay the authority its monthly share of the bills whether or not the treatment system is operating.

Favre said that wordage is necessary primarily to ensure that the district's bonded indebtedness will be covered, even if a member government is shut out of the system for non payment. Council agreed to insert a stipulation that the contract provision relates only to bonded indebtedness. And council members asked for further explanation over the proposed contract's termination date: 38 years from September 18, 1987. Officials said that possibly is a requirement in financial bond documents. Agreement on detailed provisions of the contract came during a late-night meeting of City Council, open to the public for the discussion over the objection of Mayor Eddie Favre. The Sea Coast Echo objected to closing the meeting on the grounds that the intergovernmental arrangement is not similar to other "contract negotiations" authorized by the state Freedom of Information Act for such sessions. City Attorney John Scafide, asked by Ward 2 council member Jim Thriffiley if the subject "merits an executive session,' replied, "No." Taylor and Seal also had said earlier in the meeting that it with its federal environ- should remain open.

Taylor said the three members of the district board are to be commended for the long hours, non-paid duties they perform. He also said his comments should not be taken to mean that he thinks the board has any intentions of "going wild" with spending. "I think the district will be as frugal as possible."

members: designees of Bay St. Louis, Waveland and the Board of Supervisors. The six-body membership also includes three entities which don't have a direct vote on the board.

Officials noted Tuesday that as a practical matter, the contract rule for a unanimous vote of the board on major spending proposals gives Favre and the other two board officials an effective veto power.

For years the authority operated the Waveland sewage treatment facility in a much less complex arrangement, since only Waveland and Bay St. Louis had sewer systems to collect wastewater. In recent years, however, vast unincorporated areas of the county are constructing sewer collection lines that connect with the system - and more are on the way. The new contract actually lessens Bay St. Louis' burden in the arrangement, since it requires that all costs of operating the treatment system and its bonded indebtedness will be prorated among the entities. A formula distributes all the costs on a usage basis. Favre said the city at times was paying some 70 percent of the facility's expenses - a number that's now down to about 42 percent and should drop further as other outlying areas are added to the treatment facility. Bay St. Louis has budgeted $875,000 in revenue from its utility customers this year to make its payments to the authority, an increase of some $365,000 over what the city collected last year. Due to a rate increase that was imposed by the city in September, those receipts are expected to cover all the billings the city gets from the authority this year. Favre said that in the past the city was covering its bills from the authority with supplements from other sources.

It remained unclear Tuesday night what impact, if any, the Bay St. Louis alterations of the contract will have on other members of the district. Favre said he plans to call a special meeting of council prior to By law, the district board Thanksgiving to get the

Area police officers join with Gulfport and Biloxi to establish Coast-wide mounted patrol

BY SHANNON JENKINS Staff writer

, Several police officers from Hancock County have temporarily traded in their patrol cars for four hooves and a saddle.

The six officers from the Bay St. Louis and Waveland police departments saddled up for a three-day, 30-hour training school for mount patrol held at the Harrison County fairgrounds this

They were among 31 officers from seven states who learned how to ride horses while conducting actual police work, including searching and arresting techniques and handcuffing a suspect while on horseback.

The Bay St. Louis police officers included Clay Necaise and assistant chief Dave Stepro.

Necaise, who has served as a police officer for two years, has no mount patrol experience but has ridden in the rodeo for the last six

"A trained 2-year-old horse from the New Orleans Police Department costs about $3,500," he said. "The maintenance budget per year for its mount patrol is $125,000."

However, the Coast does have the Mississippi Coast Mounted Police Association (MCMPA).

"There's not a formal structure within the association," Donavant said. "It's a cooperative effort among police officers to help law enforcement across the board."

He said there were about 50 officers with mount patrol capabilities in the three coastal counties. Donavant said the association hopes to be able to draw from that pool of officers for special events along the Coast.

"Horses are just another tool," he said. "If we get all the tools together, the police départments can provide a great service to the community."

The MCMPA has been in existence for about a year and was originally organized to help fund the Gulfport Police Mount Patrol.

"We hope to expand it to all coastal counties and use it as a funding mechanism to help the mount patrol," Donavant said.

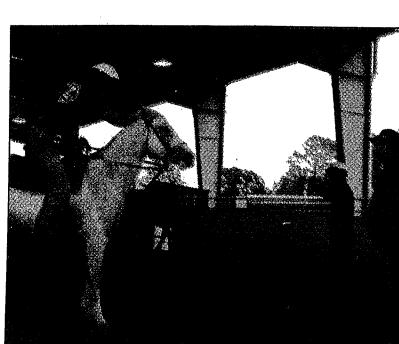

Donavant said the mount patrol was used during Black Spring Break, Mardi Gras and the July 4th holiday. He said the patrol was especially useful during the Independence Day celebration because the horses were the only ones that could get through the crowds and traffic and on the beach.

Donavant said the horses help provide a bridge between officers in patrol cars and on foot. He stressed most of all that the horses were a credible component of law enforcement.

"These horses are not a public relations gimmick,' Donavant said. "They're working police horses."

Bay St. Louis police officer Clay Necaise, left, and assistant chief Dave Stepro lead their horses around a helicopter in order to expose them to something they might see during a special event. "We want to expose the horses to as many things as possible," said Sgt. Brian Donavant with the Gulfport Police Department. "We have to train the horse how to trust the rider and not be afraid."

Bill Roessling, left, and Clay Necalse simulate an encounter between an officer on horseback and a suspect on foot under the watchful eye of an instructor.

HORTICULTURE TIPS

Keeping leaf litter and pine straw removed will not only enhance the neatness and beauty of your lawn but will also help reduce its susceptibility to disease and increase the light required for proper turf growth.

Our present cool nights and moderate day temperatures along with wet turfure ideal conditions for brown patch occurrence. By keeping this litter removed the turf has a much better chance for proper drying and air circulation to reduce this optimum disease environment.

Shade is the number one limiting factor for growing grass in tree shaded areas. Therefore, it is critical that any additional shading from fallen leaves be removed as quickly its feasible to ensure the turf absorbs as much of the sun's less intense light as possible during these last few weeks of fall.

Tired of the same old pansies for cold season color? This year panolas are available. Panolas are crosses between viola and pansies. The individual blooms are smaller than pansy flowers, but the color are more vibrant.

They are sold as Panola Panace red, Panola Penache yellow, Pinola Panache mauve, true blue ... blue blotch, and primrose.

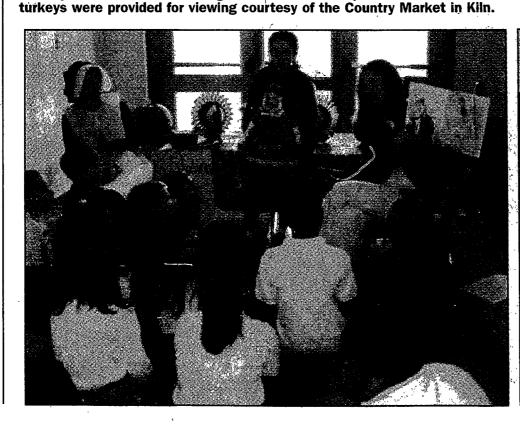

The more intense color in the petals makes the plants very striking. The unusually warm temperatures are causing collards, mustard, and turnips to use more water than normal.

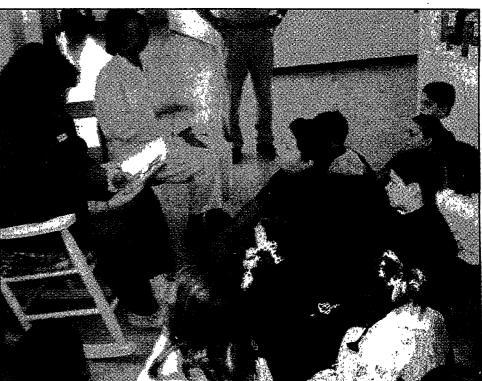

Give them a good soaking of at least an inch of water each week to prevent bitterness. Greens are also growing faster than normal, so keep them harvested before they get over, mature and fibrous.

he snapdragon is one of the most beautiful plants for cool season color, and it thrives through winter until late spring or early summer heat arrives.

Snapdragons love temperatures in the low 40s at night and low 70s by day, which make them ideally situated for fall in the South.

Many gardeners don't realize snapdragons are very cold hardy. Once established in the bed and hardened off, they can take sub-freezing temperatures with no prob-

When intense cold spells arrive, they often suck almost all available moisture from beds. That is when we need to make sure they stay well watered.

If it is really cold, completely cover the snaps with a layer of pine straw for a few days if necessary, removing once the temperatures have moderated.

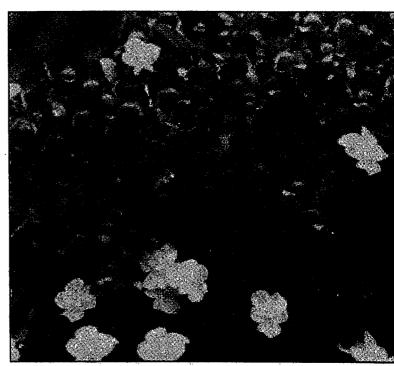

Snapdragons prefer well drained, organic-rich bed's prepared much like you would for pansies. Till in 3 to 4 inches of organic matter to a depth of 8 to 10 inches. While tilling, work in two pounds of a slow-release, 12-6-6-fertilizer per 100 square feet of bed space.

There is a color of snapdragon that is sure to fit any scheme. These include red, yellow, pink, burgundy, bronze, orange, white and multiple colors.

For the most effective display, I still believe massing the beds in single colors is the way to go. A couple of years ago, I stopped at the Natchez Sonic Drive-In and saw their wonderful bed of 24-inch-tall yellow snapdragons.

Don't forget that as these fragrant spikes get larger, they also are good for cut

THE SEA COAST ECHO

The University Coast will provide an indepth assessment of the George W. Bush presidency, Nov. 22 and 23, as it hosts the scholarly conference, "Assessing the Presidency of George W. Bush at Midpoint.'

"This conference will provide the first in-depth, scholarly analysis of the Bush presidency," said Dr. Tom Lansford, assistant professor of political science at USMGC, who is one of the conference organizers.

According to Lansford, it will also be the first time in recent history that scholars will come together to assess a president's performance at the midpoint of the term.

The conference will be held from 8 a.m.-4:45 p.m., Nov. 22, and 8 a.m.-2:30 p.m., Nov. 23, at the Advanced Education Center Auditorium at the Gulf Park campus in Long Beach.

It is free and open to the public. Along with USMGC, co-

Only a few multi-talented people are recognized with iust one name and bring a smile to your face when that name is mentioned.

Charo is one of those few. Everything Latin is in right now, and that includes Charo, the original "Cuchi-Cuchi" girl.

The performer recently returned to the limelight following more than a decade of self-imposed exile in Hawaii to raise her son Shel with husband Kjell Rasten.

While in Hawaii, Charo and Rasten ran a Mexican restaurant, and Charo entertained at clubs around the island until the Hilton Hawaiian Village built her a showroom.

Martinez Molina Barza in Murica, Spain, she was nicknamed Charo as a child.

Attending school at the Catholic convent of the Sacred Heart, Charo began playing guitar at the age of nine. Those who only know the "Cuchi-Cuchi" side of Charo will be surprised to learn that as a child she studied with Andres Segovia, the father of modern classical guitar music.

As a teenager in Madrid, she recorded albums, debuted on film in the Spanish classic "Don Juan Teniorio" and was featured in a TV show similar to "Sesame Street."

When famed Big Band leader Xavier Cugat saw her on the television show, he decided she was what his orchestra needed. She joined his band and later went out on her own as a solo performer at the age of 19. She has earned the prestigious Golden Eagle Award as Outstanding Entertainer of the Year by Nosotros, the leading Hispanic arts organization, an award also won by Gloria Estefan and Carlos Santana.

She has also received the Distinguished

Born Maria Rosario Pilar Award from Hispanic Exhibitor and Distributor. She was the winner of Guitar Player magazine's Readers Poll as Best Flamenco Guitarist two years in a row, and most recently released two albums, "Guitar Passion." showing off her guitar skills and "Gusto," her first dance album since the disco era.

She has appeared on American television as Aunt Charo in the sitcom "Chico and the Man," has been featured on more episodes of "The Love Boat" than anyone else, and made guest appearances on "Laugh In," "The Carol Burnett Show," "The Late Show with David Letterman," and "The Tonight Show with Johnny Carson."

Presently, she has been staring in "Bravo" at The Sahara Hotel and Casino in Las Vegas and will bring the same type of variety show to Casino Magic Bay St. Louis. Must be 21 to attend.
